

1010 W. 6th Street

Historic name: Arnold R. and Esther Weber House. One of the district's earliest examples of what are now called Ranch Style houses is the fine Colonial Revival-influenced house that was built in 1941 for the Webers just before the beginning of World War II. The Weber house is one-story-tall and has an attached garage. In addition, its main north-facing facade also boasts such typical Colonial Revival features as polygonal bay windows, wall surfaces that are covered in either with wide wood clapboard or with fieldstone siding, and wings that have returned eaves and gable ends ornamented with bull's-eye windows. As a result, the Weber house can be said to be a late Colonial Revival style house that also shares characteristics that are typical of ranch houses in general. Arnold R. Weber was a member of a family that operated three grocery stores in Marshfield. Arnold was the manager of Store No. 3, located at 305 S. Central Avenue.

RANCH-TYPE RESIDENCE AMONG NEW LOCAL HOMES

New Residence of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Weber, 1010 W. Sixth Street.

Among the new homes erected on the west side of the city during the past year is the ranch-type home of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Weber at 1010 W. Sixth street. With a frontage of 75 feet, the one-story dwelling is 25 feet wide at the two wings, with a connecting section 14 feet in width.

The exterior of the six-room home consists of an attractive combination of Burlington stone and white-painted edge-grain-cut wood shingles, surmounted by a roof of pompein-red stained shingles.

The home contains a 14x23 living room (occupying the center section; a 9x12 living room; a 9x9 kitchen; a 10x14 master bedroom, and two bedrooms 9x12 in size. A fireplace of light brick is a feature of the living room.

Oak floors, white-painted woodwork, and buff-tinted, float-finished walls are used generally in the new residence.

Kitchen walls have been trowel finished and painted an off white. Built-in cupboards in the kitchen are also done in off white with blue interiors. Work boards are finished in wine colored linoleum matching the border of the covered figured inlaid linoleum floor.

The home has a full sized basement, in which is located the dwelling's stoker-fed, forced air furnace, electric water heater, and laundry. The home, completed in August, also has a garage attached.
